Eleanor Roosevelt High School Marks Tenth Year as First Science Center

by Elaine Skolnik

The opening of Eleanor Roosevelt High School in September 1976 was marked by joy and a sigh of relief in the Greenbelt community. The long battle over the facility's location was over. Wounds were healing and an era of high expectations for the new school had begun.

"It was interesting to see how the program evolved from what was originally envisioned," reminisced Ray Ogden, principal of Roosevelt when the school opened in September 1976. Ogden remained for nine years and is now assistant superintendent of career and vocational development for the Prince Georges County school system.

To plan the program for Roosevelt, the county's first combined comprehensive and science technology high school, think-tank meetings were held in the former northern area headquarters on Greenbelt Road. Spearheading the sessions were county educators and administrators, including Ogden. Input was also solicited from university faculty, scientists, the business community and citizens.

"The effort was fascinating and extremely productive" recalled Muriel Weidenfeld, a staunch supporter of the combined comprehensive and science technology concept.

In the beginning there was an open enrollment policy for the comprehensive component, with the exception that students residing in Greenbelt and several other communities were automatically assigned to the new school. Admission to the technology portion was also open to all county students, but based on test scores. (Since Oxon Hill High School's science-technology component opened, only those students living north of Pennsylvania Ave. attend Roosevelt.)

"Roosevelt was more popular than we had envisioned," said Ogden. "It took three to four years for the school to get its focus." He recalled that "we started out with 22 distinct programs (in the science-tech component) and over the years narrowed it down to three basic courses."

Ogden explained "Not only was a good academic program offered but a good program for all students, including athletics, music and the arts . . . We did not neglect the comprehensive students in lieu of pushing those in science technology . . . ; everybody was brought along. Our policy was to offer something to every student who attended Roosevelt."

Originally there was concern that chasms would develop between students of the technology and comprehensive components. Ogden felt this never really happened because the administration achieved its goal of keeping the program balanced. Also there were opportunities for students to mix together in classes that were open to everyone on the basis of ability — to the humanities, arts, upper level science classes and electives.

Milton Steinbaum, principal since November 1985, said, "If a program helps students grow academically, it gives them a sense of worth about themselves so that they won't look at anyone else." He thought that clubs, which are open to everyone, provide a balance to academia. In a club setting a student's personal development is promoted by doing something worthwhile, he explained.

Ogden said "hard work by the staff kept chasms from developing." He also credited "very active PTAs and parents from year one as helping to bridge the gap as well."

He saw the dichotomy in the building as one between the bright students and those students needing help. "The building," he explained, "had an exaggerated population—a lot of the best in Prince Georges County and a fair share of students needing remedial skills . . . The program had to work to address these concerns and the key was an excellent faculty."

Steinbaum credited Ogden with doing a "fine job" in addressing this concern. "Teachers," he noted, "just don't teach one caliber of students. They each all levels so they don't become labeled."

New Program This Year

"My aim is to increase the quality of instruction and programs for all students," Steinbaum stressed. He was excited about a new program started this year for students who have difficulties in school "but somehow can't get it together . . . and often drop out." In dealing with this, he explained, "certain teachers work in a cooperative effort with students to give them strong basic skills and background on careers . . . Lessons are highly structured and requirements are made clear." Teachers also keep in contact with the student's home.

Steinbaum feels certain the program will be successful and reduce the number of dropouts. He pointed to another innovation developed by special education teachers — a "hands-on" program which involves teaching skills such as painting. A stipend is also given to students for their projects.

"Students see some money coming in from their efforts and realize if you learn certain skills and apply them to projects, there are monetary rewards."

Steinbaum is proud of Roosevelt's comprehensive language program, which this year added Japanese to a list that includes Latin, Russian, German, French, Italian and Spanish.

He said Roosevelt was nationally known for its high achievement levels in terms of the Merit scholarship standardized tests. Last year the school had the highest number of finalists in the area and this year ranks among the top schools.

In response to a question about business involvement in the program, Steinbaum said: "We have been adopted by Harry Diamond Labs, a quasi-governmental agency performing research." Students, particularly those in the science technology program, have access to Diamond's computerized periodical library that has a nationwide network. Advanced students in the research practicum are working with Diamond and hope to connect into the library network to service students.

Roosevelt and Oxon Hill High Schools recently had a week-long practicum to learn what was out in the business world and how business can support the staff of the schools, for example, in acquiring equipment.

Crime Prevention Training Plays to a Packed House

by Sid Kastner

About ninety-five residents of the Greenbriar condominium complex, consisting of the successive development Phases I, II and III, filled the Terrace Room of the Greenbriar Community Center on Thursday evening, September 30 to hear an audiovisual presentation on crimewatch training by the Greenbelt Police Department. Also attending were some residents of the newer Greenwood Village development east of Eleanor Roosevelt High School. Interest was particularly high because of the unfortunate rape incident in Greenbriar Phase III just two weeks before.

Presiding was Dorothy Pyles of the Greenbriar Phase III Crimewatch Committee, who introduced police chief Francis Hutson, Lieutenant Jim Craze and PFC Patrick McAndrew. Hutson commented at the beginning that "one thing that helps to make a city safe is the crimewatch program." He noted that "You're not asked to put in a lot of time . . . the more people (participating) the less time to put in."

The main program was given by McAndrew, who started by noting that three parts of a crimewatch system were (a) Operation ID—identification, marking and listing one's possessions; (b) home security—a check of entryways, locks and general access to a home; and (c) neighborhood watch—keeping a lookout for suspicious actions.

A slide show describing the national neighborhood crime-watch program and some particular group activities was then presented, along with statistics on the average number of crimes of various types taking place in any given period of time. Copies of pamphlets on "Operation Identification," "What to do before the burglar comes," "Outsmarting crime" and how to "Protect your child" were also provided for those present.

After telling the audience that "You're the eyes and ears of the police department . . . we encourage you to call if you see anything suspicious . . . we do want the calls," McAndrew gave some examples of possibly suspicious acts: strangers hanging around cars in parking lots, strangers hanging around children, cars moving without lights in a parking lot, broken windows, someone running with an object in their hands, or looking disheveled, people transferring from one car to another, someone apparently being forced into a car against their will, etc. He added that if a possible crime is observed involving a car, "Get the license number description, and direction of travel"; if a fight between people is seen, let the police know if a weapon is involved.

After describing this "static" part of a crimewatch program, in which people are "watching out constantly," the officer described the "mobile" part, which consists of a CB (Citizen's Band) base station, and two people—a mobile patrol—in a car. The drive-

Time for Decision

Greenbelt has a precious heritage and a museum would be an excellent way to honor the courage and foresight of our city's pioneers. And what better setting than one of the original homes!

It seems incredible that some people would oppose such an exciting concept. Certainly dissent is part of our heritage too. But isn't there a time to make a decision and move on to action? What a loss if the Tugwell Room in our library had been successfully opposed! Do these people also oppose celebrating our 50th anniversary in 1987? These both cost tax money too.

This is the time for the rest of us who believe in honoring Greenbelt's past—and its meaning for the future—to get vocal too!! Let's not lose this opportunity.

David and Deanne Lange

Cast Not the Issue

The small amount each and every taxpayer would have to pay to support a museum over the next three years is a simplification of the issue. At least $20,000 the first year and comparable funds for the next two years is to be paid out of public funds on a project which will not "benefit all citizens of Greenbelt for years to come." And that would not be all the Friends of the Greenbelt Museum (FOGM) would expect the city to be responsible for. At best it will help a teacher demonstrate to her class what type of assistance the government rendered a few of its great depression victims. How many classes, how many times a year? A few other citizens, out of curiosity, will wander in one time; the friends of the museum will do all they can to promote it, but will very likely soon find it too much of a burden and lose interest.

It cannot be compared to a tennis court or a swimming pool as one member did at the work session. Those recreational facilities contribute to the health and enjoyment of young and old and, although I do not use either facility, I am glad to contribute to their upkeep.

Formerly, the idea expressed at hearings was that 10-B Crescent be restored, as near as possible, to the original house. Now FOGM admits it would be impractical to replace the new windows with the original and other items. They would hope to install the original kitchen cabinets. If it is not to be an original, what is the advantage of a GHI house over any type housing for the artifacts?

Greenbelt, in its conception, was only a small part of the 1930's efforts to get the country out of the Great Depression. Only World War II accomplished that task. It also brought forth the Defense housing for war workers and families of the military, fighting for our country, another historical event usually overlooked by the aristocracy of original Greenbelt.

Small or large, I oppose the use of public funds to establish a museum.

Bettie G. Denson

Fireworks in October!

Greenbelters may be wondering why they were treated to a fireworks display on Saturday night about 7 p.m. The fireworks were part of a birthday celebration for the son of a manufacturer of fireworks given at the Greenbelt Hilton. Even the Greenbelt and county police were caught by surprise by the pyrotechnics display.

Letters to the Editor

Museum Plan Protested

As a concerned citizen I attended a meeting of the City Council on October 14 to protest the purchase of a GHI house for the Greenbelt Museum. It was evident that this meeting was a rallying point for the museum rather than an open forum for discussion of the merits of such a project. Most of the questions raised by citizens not convinced that a museum was needed to extol the beauty and value of the city of Greenbelt were not satisfactorily answered. It was obvious that the museum was being pushed through without adequate time to completely review the ramifications of making such a serious decision. It was even said that we must move quickly while the GHI home is still available!

When a referendum was suggested on the subject, it was said that the question was settled when the bond issue was approved. The bond issued stated: "We are considering the purchase of a GHI house to be used for the Greenbelt museum." Apparently the council thinks "consider" is a synonym for "decide."

In a recent letter to the News Review, a member of the museum committee stated that the property will be owned (not so under GHI) by the city and after five or ten years if the city council feels that the museum is not a success, it could dispose of the property and get the money back (that's not guaranteed either). This indicates a lack of confidence in the future success of the project.

I feel this purchase plus the continuous expense involved in the preservation of such a museum is an inappropriate use of the taxpayer's money and I urge the council to reconsider its position.

Halloween Is a Time For Fun and Safety

Halloween should be a fun time for children, but it can also be a dangerous time. The Maryland Department of Transportation warns motorists, parents, and children that by Friday, October 31, the return to Eastern Standard Time will affect the evening hours; darkness will occur earlier. Motorists should be especially cautious during the prime Halloween hours of 5 to 9 p.m.

Halloween participants should remember to cross streets at the corners only and walk, not run, on sidewalks, facing traffic. Children should stay in their immediate neighborhood and avoid strangers and stray animals. All trick-or-treating should be done in groups with at least one parent accompanying the children.

Costumes should be light-colored or have some reflector tape on them. Flashlights or light sticks can help drivers spot trick-or-treaters. Loose flowing costumes can be dangerous as they might get tangled up and cause a fall. Masks should not interfere with one's vision; children can create a face with make-up.

Youngsters should not eat treats until they return home. Parents need a chance to inspect everything. There are several hospitals in the area which have offered to x-ray any candy or treats brought in on Halloween.

CORRECTION

Last Friday I received a copy of your Thursday, August 16, 1986 News Review. This is the one that contains the legal ad for the Council meeting of the City Council for Tuesday, October 20, 1986. These dates do not jibe with my Hallmark calendar. However, my Hallmark calendar was a freebie and what can you expect from a freebie?

I was wondering if you could publish or otherwise make available the calendar which you are using so that I can get my dates straight. Obviously you know something that I do not know as I do not know anyone who would ever question the accuracy of the Greenbelt News Review (well, hardly anyone).

James K. Giese
City Manager

Ed Note: We were wrong because we were two months off on the dateline. But so were you as the copy for Monday's agenda received from the City said Tuesday, October 20. Must have been something in the air. We hope that no one showed up too early or too late for the council meeting.

Next year when we are both using the Greenbelt 50th Anniversary Calendar will be better. Right?

More Than a Tribute

It is good that Mary Linstrom has so ably presented the tax cost of the Greenbelt Museum to the individual household. What it comes down to is an annual cost of $1.53 at the most and 56 cents at the very least. This should lay to rest the exaggerated statements of those opposed to the museum, statements which have caused distress to many of our Greenbelters. The cost should not cause any fear of being beyond the capacity of any householder.

It seems, however, that the museum idea itself seems to upset some people. I think that they miss the point.

We are proud to be Greenbelters and as we approach our 50th Anniversary we are reminded of our uniqueness. It is this uniqueness that the Greenbelt Museum is to stress and explain to future generations. The museum would pay homage to our past as the first planned community built by the federal government; that our Greenbelt inspired the development of such new towns as Columbia and Reston. The museum would remind people that Greenbelt was one of the historic creations of the Roosevelt New Deal.

But the museum would be more than a tribute to the past. It would represent an inspiration to future generations.

stands as a tribute to the early inhabitants of our community and the great treasure they left us and future generations, especially a true sense of community which is a rare and precious gift, it can serve as an attraction to our community to people far and wide. The museum will represent the sense of pride we have in our Greenbelt and, in itself, will add to the uniqueness of our roots to the present generation and an inspiration to future generations.

We have had many sharp differences of opinion in our town, but, on the whole we have been able to disagree without becoming too disagreeable. We do have an essential unity in our diversity. Once we have the museum, the people who now frown upon it will come to love it and be

Objects to Many Opinions On North End School

After reading James P. Kizale's letter in the News Review on October 16 and listening to his remarks at the CRAB meeting at North End School on October 18, I have to disagree with many opinions.

First, the City of Greenbelt made a reasoned and planned request for the school when the property became available. The citizens have on several occasions (1983 and 1985 city elections) expressed support for the use of the school for a multi-purpose center.

Second, the Citizens for North End Center (CNEC) proposals advanced the CRAB-included components which were envisioned as self-supporting as well as components which reflected an increase in the city provision of services to its residents. The CNEC's principal objective in relationship to a non-profit organization using the renovated facility was that they are able to pay the operating cost of the facility.

The value to the community of a facility which addresses a broad range of services located in the North End can't be overlooked. Careful decision-making is required. That is what the members of the committee and myself are endeavoring to do.

Mr. Kizale may not have known but a decision to demolish the facility will cost the city dearly, to the tune of $250,000.

Citizens for North End Center

Following this general presentation several listeners, mainly women, asked many searching and urgent questions. The first question was from one who was "very concerned about . . . the incident of the rape, and how to protect ourselves." McAndrew responded that the police department was going to try to set up another session on sexual assault. He added, "You can call us for an officer escort—it's a service we do provide." In reply to a male questioner who asked, "What happens if we witness a rape attempt and get involved?" he cautioned "That will be your own responsibility." Lieutenant Craze commented that "Many criminals are armed and we don't want two victims where there was one." Finally, after this intense give-and-take, Pyles added her own observations on what to watch out for, and Valerie Siegel, chairperson of the Greenbelt Crime Prevention Committee (GCP) encouraged members of the Greenbriar audience to talk to the other crimewatch groups already operating in Greenbelt, such as the Northway and Windsor Green groups. Siegel noted that the GCP holds regular meetings on the second Thursday of the month and concluded by thanking the audience for its participation.
